There's something about high school football that's not just who out of a skill level of athletes in the game, it shows how hard that person is, how much he wants to win for his team and his city, and how much hard work he's going to take to get there. But what happens with football is that there are so many different players who needed to be on a winning team, and there are so many different positions that those players need to fill, each of them has a variety of different skill levels, and each of them takes a special type of personality. If you're an offensive lineman, you're strong and tough, but your urge is to protect, while if you're a defensive lineman you have a desire to attack. Wide receivers, runners, cornerbacks and safes are the athletes and daredevils of the group, while the quarterback is not only a good athlete, but also the leader of the crew. Then you have the kickers and special teams guys, which are a little harder to define. Take this quiz and we'll guess which position you played in high school. Hut hut. Copyright © 2021 InfoSpace Holdings, LLC, a System1 company This just happened at my school, I thought you guys in this group would like: This week in the ads, our sporting director told us about the new rules for football matches. None of them were too bad, except for not being able to take off our shirts (sports bras for girls) anymore, in order to paint our chests. We were all angry, and determined to do something about it, so tonight in the game, the whole (huge) spirit section sat quietly and didn't clap at all. At half-time, we were down 9-0 and the cheermen were angry because we wouldn't even get up. The principal called the boy in charge and they talked for a while. When she came back, she told us that she had agreed not to wear shirts at the homecoming game, as long as we didn't use the Bullshit chant. A few minutes later, someone else came down and talked to her, convinced her to withdraw politics from next week, if we start cheering on this game. In the end, it was a great success, and we also won the football game! Mayo Clinic researchers say they have found promising long-term health outcomes for men who played football in high school. Sharing on PinterestA new Mayo Clinic study shows that playing high school college-level football does not carry an increased risk of neurodegenerative diseases compared to other varsity-level sports. Sports medicine experts welcome research and say there is still a lot of work to be done when it comes to understanding brain injuries. Researchers analyzed the long-term health of people who practiced sports in high school between 1956 and 1970. In total, 486 former student-athletes who experienced head trauma was slightly higher among those who had played football (11 percent vs. 7 percent), student athletes who had not played football showed slightly higher rates of mild cognitive impairment and parkinsonism. Read more: Youth Football Can Be Safe Enough, Pediatricians »The study finding, published in Mayo Clinic Proceedings, seems to be in opposition to recent revelations that many former professional football players suffer from chronic traumatic encephalopathy (CTE), a degenerative brain disease associated with repeated head trauma. He told Healthline: There has been a concerted emphasis on installing equipment. Important educational measures have also been given with coaches, as well as with all participants in understanding head injuries. Read more: Doctors diagnose football dementia in living patients »While the attitudes and awareness surrounding head injuries in football have changed significantly, there is still a significant gap when it comes to fully understanding these injuries. As we continue to evaluate and study this injury, we continue to learn more about its ability to be treated and prevented, Kersey said. The when we handle concussions today compared to the way we handle concussions even 10 years ago is significantly different, Stewart said. And because of that, this pendulum has turned, and with the pendulum swinging like this, we're not going to know if what we're doing today is right or not for probably another 10 or 15 years. Stewart hopes that with ongoing research, the medical community will find more ways to minimize risk in the think that if we keep doing it right, we'll be fine, he says. And then, as we move forward with a lot of the research that's happening and we're moving forward, I think we'll get to a point where we have some of the answers. I think at some point we can have a battery of tests where we can say, 'You're at significantly higher risk of developing CTE, so you shouldn't be involved in this sport.'
